GENERAL MANAGER JEFFERS HONOR-GUEST AT BANQUET

Seventy-five professional and business men and railroad employees tendered General Manager Wm. M. Jeffers of the Union Pacific, a banquet at the Hotel McCabe Tuesday evening. While the affair was under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce, other than members of that organization were present, and the number was limited only by reason of the seating capacity of the dining room. The attendance would have been doubled or trebled had accommodations been ample, for North Platte is proud, and justly so, of the man who as a boy was a messenger in the local railroad office and is today general manager of one of the greatest railway systems in the world. Certainly it is creditable to Mr. Jeffers that he has risen from so humble a position to one requiring so great ability, and this too in a period of twenty-six years and before he has attained the age of forty. North Platte, like all the world, admires the man who entirely through his own efforts "makes good"—the man who wins by tireless energy, by the exercise of his brain power, by loyalty to his employer, and these are the characteristics which made William M. Jeffers a great railroad man.

The entertainment provided by Manager Weingand was all that could be, for in those early days he was em-service good and the orchestral music enlivening.

W. T. Wilcox occupied the toastmaster's chair and he first introduced T. C. Patterson who under the head of "Old Times," related incidents connected with the early history of the Union Pacific, and well qualified was he, for in those early days he was employed as fireman. His recital of railroading in those days, which was so vastly different from the present, proved intensely interesting.

"All Aboard" was responded to by Conductor Mose McFarland, who spoke of the satisfactory conditions of the railroading today, of the loyalty and good-will which existed between the employees and the company and was certain that the same relation would exist under the new general manager. He congratulated Mr. Jeffers upon his appointment.

Engineer Will Richards responded to the toast "A Clear Track," which he applied to the present condition of the Union Pacific as well as to North Platte—a clear track that meant progression for each. Mr. Richards related in an amusing way some of the incidents which befell him as engineer at a time when Mr. Jeffers was a dispatcher in the local office. He congratulated Mr. Jeffers upon his advancement, and speaking for the engineers assured him of a continuance of their loyal support.

"Our Guest" was responded to by Ira L. Bare, who extended the congratulations and best wishes of the people of North Platte to Mr. Jeffers upon his rapid ascent in the railway world and recited the progress of the messenger boy to general manager.

In reply to these remarks, Mr. Jeffers thanked the people of North Platte for the kindly interest they had always shown in his welfare, that to that interest, and especially the help given him by F. E. Bullard when he was a messenger boy, was due part of his success. A North Platte man who has two boys had asked him that day, "Billy, to what particular thing do you owe your success?" and that he had responded "loyalty to my superior officers." Mr. Jeffers re-
